Graduating with First Class Honours from the University of Wollongong, Ellen is a war historian with a particular interest in the relationship between battlefield injuries and medical advancements. This interest began during a 2015 study tour of Gallipoli which acted as a catalyst for future research. Earlier this year, Ellen participated in the Australian War Memorial's Summer Scholar program during which she completed research regarding the battle of Hamel and how it acted to test innovative technology on the battlefield. Most recently Ellen completed a Master of Museum and Heritage Studies at the University of Sydney and plans to further her war research by undertaking a PhD in the near future.
